

Tensho - 転掌

2° Kyu

Tensho means rotating palms or literally translated as 'revolving hands', from the characters Ten - 転 ('revolve') and Shō - 掌 ('palm' of 'hand'). So Tensho describes the movements of the palms that characterize this Kata.

Tensho was developed by Chojun Miyagi after his return from China in 1916 where he had been researching the origins of Okinawan Martial Arts. This Kata was created in 1921 as a softer Sanchin no Kata. Tensho is the soft and circular, Yin - 陰, counterpart to the hard and linear, Yang - 陽, Sanchin no Kata. It emphasizes the soft aspects of Naha-te system and encompasses continuous, flowing movements. It may be a variant of the Southern Chinese Kung Fu form Rokishu - 六基手 ('six functions of the hands'). Hard dynamic tension are combined with deep breathing and soft flowing hand movements. This Kata has also its roots in White Crane Boxing and Monk Fist Boxing and influenced by Naha village area in Okinawa which became the style known today as Goju-ryu.

Tensho not only employs far more sophisticated hand techniques, it also teaches a far more efficient and subtle form of body tension. Movements in Tensho are flowing but under tension with deep breathing. Tensho is about refinement, perfection, concentration and focus. This Kata will teach you the importance of forefinger and thumb positioning when you twist your palm. Likewise the order of closing the fingers in order to make your Koken solid.

It turns out that, proper breathing and good extensive practice of Kata like Tensho and Sanchin no Kata, can be good for your health, "A Tensho a day, sends the doctor away". Every morning, 60 times of breathing out and breathing in through the nose, helps to keep you healthy. The correct way of breathing is to first breathe out, then breathe in. In the modern way we are taught to breathe in, then breathe out. In Karate we first concentrate the power by breathing out in a stroke. In breathing for health, when we breathe in, we change this breath to energy and circulate it in the body to store for the flowing energy.

Tensho was one of Mas Oyama's favorite Kata and he stated that if you mastered Tensho, you are able to defend yourselves against any opponent. It made its way into the curriculum of Kyokushin Karate as a Southern Kata because of Mas Oyama's extensive background in Goju-ryu, under sensei Nei-Chu So, and his teacher, Gogen Yamaguchi. Mas Oyama trained from time to time with Gogen Yamaguchi, even joining the latter's Goju-kai and obtaining the rank of 7th Dan Black Belt.
